the little 8-year-old daughter of George Miller was gathering apples out on the commons Monday afternoon she was perced by an 18 year old lad named Will Harris and dragged to a cornfield near by and ravished. The brute after accomplishing his purpose left the girl nearly dead. Her ground attracted some small children, who at once reported the matter to her parents. It Was some time before she could tell who assaulted her. A posse of officers and curzens started in pursuit and found Harris hiding in an old baru shortly after midnight. He does not deny that he is guilty and it was with difficulty that a mob was kept from stringing him up. The girl is in a critical coudi-

As president of the women's board of managers at the Atlantics estion Mrs. Joseph K. Thompson has appeared in a new role. Hitherto she has been a social leader, noted for her brilliancy, beauty and wit, but since she has been installed to her new position she has shown to much executive ability, tact and talent that even her friends are dolightfully surprised. Those who are working in conjunction with her say that she has the same admirable qualities which made Mrs. Potter Palmer such a bower at the Chicago exposition. Mrs. Thompson is the only daughter of Colonel Minimis of Atlanta, and be edged belle of that city, a distinction which she retained after she became the wife of Joseph Thompson, the proprietor of the Kimbali House. Both as Miss Mina Minus and Mrs. Thompson she is well known in social circles in this city and is a particular favorite in the southern colony here. In appearance she is tall and statuesque, with beautiful brown hair and eyes. Her personal boauty is enhanced by the vivacity and grace which are characteristic of southern women. No woman's strongth is equal to the demands made upon it by claims-domestic, social and intellectual-of these latter days, and since this fact is indisputable why not look the problem squarely in the face and decide calmly when to shirk? The question of course chiefly concerns the homekeeper, she who endeavors to keep a house up to concert pitch of tidiness and not just occasionally and in spots either, but all over and all the time. Besides the mera sweeping, dusting, arranging and menuproviding to be superintended, there are, too, the hospitality that she must be ever ready to offer smilingly and the duties to herself-not to speak of church and charitable work, club life and the rlaims of society. natural features of the question. It is true that at some time in the nest, so far back that the mind or knowledge of man cannot reach, when the dog [ 👛 was in the wild state, and when he was forced to eat meat or starve to death, he was carnivorous. While he has the capabilities of living on vegetable food, nature seems to be remise in furnishing, sim with the correct teeth for grinding, such as we observe in the horse, or, sheep and goats. This is surely a remarkable instance of adaptability, as we observe in only one other animal, and that is man himself.

No doubt all these changes in the nature of the dog have been brought about by domesticity; the association with man and the consequent impressions and education which have been transmitted
